About Steph

Steph's background includes experiences from living in South Africa and her travels to different countries, which broadened her cultural horizons and honed her understanding of what it means to relocate and adapt to new environments.

It's also one of the reasons why she chose to be a relocation consultant. "I enjoy welcoming people ashore as I didn't have that when I arrived. It took a lot of trial and error to find my groove and get things going."

She joined a library to have access to local how to's, ask questions, use printers, delve into knowledge, and give her a space to be when the weather was inclement for walks in parks. "I also found meeting recruiters kept me focused; seek.com.au only gives you one side of the story," she recalls.

When asked about her top advice for those moving to Australia, she mentioned joining the library and partaking in activities. "The activities are anything from seeing a show, going to a restaurant, signing up for networking groups, and looking up recruiters to make the appointments. You need to focus on staying social to curb any doubts on relocating."
